Control of National Highways Land and Traffic) Act, 2002(13 of 2003)

203.

Statement of Objects and Reasons.-At present, the National Highways are governed by the National Highways Act, 1956 and the National Highways Authority of India Act, 1988. These enactments contain provisions for declaration of the National Highways and for the constitution of the National Highways Authority of India for the development, maintenance and management of the National Highways and the matters connected therewith. However, these enactments do not give powers to the Central Government to prevent or remove encroachments on land under the National Highways, or to restrict access to them from the adjacent land, or to regulate traffic movement of any category of vehicles or animals on the National Highways. The provisions in the existing law and in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 have not proved effective in view of dilatory tactics adopted by the private parties to defeat the purposes of these Acts. In order to effectively deal with these problems, it is imperative to vest the Central Government with necessary powers through the Highway Administration.2. National Highways are rapidly getting congested and choked by undesirable roadside developments and encroachments. In fact, encroachments make further widening of the existing roads in response to growing traffic, very difficult and costly, and often, impossible. The result is that the main traffic on the National Highways is subjected to a lot of hardship and there is widespread criticism about the deteriorating level of service.3. The absence of legislation empowering the competent authority to remove encroachments on the National Highways has resulted in shops, hotels, tea stalls, repair shops, petrol pumps, weigh bridges, residences and commercial establishments extending their activities right on the National Highways land.4. Highway authorities do not have either power to regulate traffic coming on the National Highways or to control the number of access roads joining the highways. All this leads to failure of roads and bridges caused by overloading, increased congestion, waste of fuel, reduced speed, high incidents of accidents, increased vehicle operating costs and unhealthy and unhygienic conditions. It has been also observed that highways are frequently dug up by utility organisations which put the traffic on highways in danger. The highway authorities have no adequate legal authority to prevent such nuisances.<sup>5</sup> To overcome the afore-mentioned problems, it is proposed to bring the Bill in Parliament to enact legislation to regulate traffic as well as the right of way on the National Highways. The salient features of the proposed legislation are as follows:-(a) establishment of Highway Administrations and authorisation of officers by them for enforcing the provisions of the proposed legislation and establishment of Tribunals for hearing appeals against the orders of the Highway Administrations and their authorised officers;(b) prevention of unauthorised occupation of highway land and removal thereof;(c) control of access points to the National Highways;(d) regulation of different types of the traffic permitted on the National Highways;(e) control of use of road land for public utilities, drains, etc.; and(f) issue of licences of lease deeds for temporary use of the National Highways land.<sup>6</sup> The Bill seeks to achieve the above objects.[14th January, 2003]An Act to provide for control of land within the National Highways, right of way and traffic moving on the National Highways and also for removal of unauthorised occupation thereon .Be it enacted by parliament in the Fifty-third Year of the Republic of India as follows:
